WALK-INS AND APPOINTMENTS

Detective,

I did it! I actually went in and got evidence from the three remaining krewe dens myself. It was a hell of a two days, so I'm really counting on you to make it all worth it.

When I snuck into the Pirate Bros den, it was packed for Booty Fest IV. The whole place smelled like vodka and armpits and rotting crawfish, but that's pretty much what I expected. I couldn't snatch too many things without being spotted (hard to sneak around when your shoes keep sticking to the floor), but I did find an interesting photo of Dillon that might help us. I also happened to catch the bros in a pretty heated argument, which I recorded while I was hiding behind one of their floats. Of course, parts of it were in their weird twin language, so I'll definitely need your help translating it.

I went to Barksalot next, and it was easy enough to get in since they usually leave their doors unlocked. I thought the place was going to be empty, but the krewe's new leader Janelle was there, trying to corral an abnormally large dog off of a parade float. In the commotion, I managed to grab an unopened letter to Nonah and some other papers before heading out as quickly as I could.

I also sent you a few things from the MKML den, which thankfully I did not need to sneak into. The first is a temporary tattoo with our logo, and the second is an invitation to our last ball. After all we've been through, you're basically part of the krewe now, and I think Celestine would agree if she was still here. The third is a set of costume sketches. It's got Ines's weird code circle on it, and I'd love to know what she was trying to hide. I'm so stuck with Ines. I want to trust her. I want to know all those years we spent together weren't a lie, but she sent me a letter that I've reread so many times it's lost all meaning to me.

There's also this video Ines sent me of her interviewing Celestine. I don't know if she wanted me to thank her or what, but watching really shows how they loved and hated each other. I didn't used to get that, but now I kind of understand because deep down, I think I kind of love and hate Ines too. Whatever my future is after all this, I don't see her in it. And I'm starting to be okay with that.

The video, plus everything else, should be up on the desktop for you at royalstreetcase.com. The password is LAVEAU this time.

This could be it. We've narrowed the pool down to three people: Dillon, Nonah, and Ines, and I think it's possible we now have enough information to identify one of them as Celestine's killer. I'm so nervous I can hardly breathe, but we've got to keep moving forward. I trust you, and I know you'll uncover the truth.

When you've figured out who murdered my best friend, send me an email with their name and the subject line SOLVED.

Let's get justice for Celestine. It's long overdue.

Sylvia Jones

P.S. You might want to hide this letter after you read it, just so there's no trace of me breaking and entering... (And stealing mail, which is apparently a federal crime.) Plausible deniability or something like that, right?
