

SUPERNEUTRAL

Investigator,

By the time this package reaches you, I'll be in the Black Hills Forest. Lanning gave me another warning to get out of town, but I'm not going to let him or the whole damn Sheriff's Office stop me.

I went to the Kent house, and Harriett ran out to me the second I got there. She seemed to be able to tell I was determined to go inside, and even though she tried to warn me not to go in, I eventually got through to her that she wasn't going to be able to stop me. When that finally seemed to sink in, Harriett got a few things from her house she said I should have: a note, along with some copies of documents from her "archives." Then she just turned and walked back to her home. Even from where I stood, it felt like I could hear locks clicking and bolts sliding into place. Guess she gave me all she could.

The Kent house was trashed, and I didn't know what Harriett meant about someone being in here until a few minutes later, when I looked at a picture I took on my phone. It was Emma. Somehow. In the Kents' house. I tried to get another picture of her, looked all over the house through my phone, but this was all I could get.

Emma Parker wouldn't be the first person to mysteriously "appear" in some place where she couldn't possibly be. Especially not in Burkittsville. Maybe it's astral projection, maybe a vision. Whatever it is, to me there's no doubt. She was trying to get my attention. And she got it. I spotted some things she left for me. A couple papers with her writing on them that looked like they were picked up from around here, and part of a comic I saw Emma reading while she researched related folklore for the trip. They were all hung on the refrigerator with a magnet. It was this stupid SuperNeutral magnet I gave to her. She was so thrilled to get it, kept acting like I'd given her some precious gift. I just didn't have any better swag on me.

I need you to make sense of all this and help guide me to my crew. They might be separated, so there may be more than one place we'll need to check. For now, just focus on where to send me first. Let me know the location through the chat box on SuperNeutralPodcast.com. I made sure to update your folder on the site since I'll be in the woods by the time you get this. The new password is KRAKEN. There's already that map of the woods there from earlier in our investigation. That may help.

Maybe a part of me always knew I'd end up in these woods at night, when they're at their most powerful. No matter how I kept trying to avoid it. But not everyone who goes into these woods knows what they're dealing with in the same way we do. Let's hope that gives us the upper hand.

Ed