

MARCUS LOURDES

Carol,

It's occurred to me lately that the two of us have somehow never socialized outside of the rink throughout all our many years of working together. I suppose it makes sense; we see enough of each other at the rink. Still, I feel the need to get to know my coworkers and the town of Three Pines better.

And who better to show me around? You've lived in the same house here since you were a child after all; only Nathan comes close to your longevity in this town, right? I know he never lived on your exact street, but he was very close by, wasn't he?

Regardless, considering recent business developments, I think it would make sense to form a deeper friendship and discuss our ideas and aspirations for the future.

Care to do so over chilled Sancerre? The cozy little bistro just reopened. Their wine list is better curated than you'd expect from the name.

Just so we're on the same page, you're at 25 Mountain, right? To get to the restaurant, you make a right onto Bristlecone, and then turn left at the third intersection you hit. It's two blocks from that.

Warmly,
M
