

Sofia de la Torre

Detective,

I don't know if you heard it in my voice in my last message, but my entire body was shaking during that conversation with Anne. I usually don't react to anything she says that strongly since I know she's full of hot air. But she seemed so sure that Nathan was up to something. And she was so much closer to him than I ever realized.

Still, I have a hard time buying it. Nathan was many things, but secretive wasn't one of them. If he thought you looked like an idiot on the ice, he'd say so in those exact words, but with this disarming smile that still made you feel like he was on your side. And whenever he gave you a big, energetic double thumbs-up when you impressed him, you could tell he meant it with every fiber of his being. Honestly, does that sound like the kind of guy who can keep a secret even from his girlfriend?

Then again, I guess the girlfriend herself was also a secret. Finding out all of this stuff about Nathan after he's gone is so strange. You spend thousands of hours with someone, let them see you at your highest highs and lowest lows, allow them to become a huge part of who you are as a person and a professional... you kind of figure it's a two-way street, you know? But that's not true.

More than anything else, I want to be able to talk to Nathan about how crazy all of this is. Maybe tease him about his weird, unlikely, and somewhat disturbing love connection and ask him why he was so shifty about it right before he died. And to thank him for fighting for me to get into the tournament. If I had known, I never would have said the things I said to him. I'll never be able to apologize for that. He looked so hurt. So disappointed. I wish that I could undo that expression.

But I can't, so we'll need to do the next best thing: investigate. We have to get into Nathan's office to see what he was hiding on that computer.

But there's a problem. Nathan's office is locked using a combination keypad. I can't figure out what it could possibly be. I'd try to guess until I got it, but standing outside of a dead man's door punching in random numbers would be a great way to get thrown out of the rink.

That's where you come in. I need you to find the keypad combination to get into Nathan's office.

With that in mind, I've spent a long time looking for more clues, and I found a few things that may be of interest. I listed them out in the case log on the virtual desktop.

Log on to threepinescase.com with the password SALCHOW and send me the combination to Nathan's office on the messenger. Then I can sneak in and take a look around.

Talk soon,

Sofia