REMINDER: UPDATE YOUR DOOR CODES

Everyone,

I understand we're all very busy here, but this is a reminder: If you have a private office, it is required by ASA regulation that your room be protected by an internal security system. We installed keypads on each of your doors quite some time ago, but you will need to program them with a personalized seven-digit code before they can be activated. You have until the end of the day on Monday to do so. If it is even one second past midnight, I will be handing out sanctions.

Thank you.

Thank you for the reminder, Carol! Unfortunately, I will not be in the office for the next couple of weeks. Is there a way I can change the code remotely?

Don't worry about it, Vik. Message me a number, and I'll do it for you when I do mine.

Car, I swear you gotta chill out with the sanctions. I've been written up so much over the past few months that the rule book is burned into my brain. 😊

Now, Nate, knowingly and repeatedly ignoring any rules you feel shouldn't apply to you (and you, chronic offender that you are, know the exact five rules I'm referring to) isn't acceptable behavior as an employee. I don't think it's funny that you continue to do so. One of these days, it's going to bite you in the butt if you're not careful.

You sound proud, Nathan. I'm sure the extra attention is nice, but why give Carol the additional work? Between managing all of our schedules and her own charity, I'd hardly say she needs it. I sometimes wonder how it is that you stay employed here.

You're right, Marcus, I don't need it.

To answer your question, Marcus, I'm still here because of my boyish charm. And an ironclad contract that would make getting rid of me before I turn 70 basically impossible unless I was to commit some kind of horrendous crime against skating. Mostly the first thing, though.

Come on, C, you know I never wanted to make your job harder. I was just pulling your leg. No harm, no foul.

THIS THREAD IS NOW CLOSED.
