WALK-INS AND APPOINTMENTS

Hi Detective,

Thanks again for everything you've done so far for me. For Celestine, really. All of the stuff from Celestine's desk and her VuMail Drive showed just how many people really might've wanted her dead, so we've got a lot of suspects to track. Cyril, Jay, Nonah, Mason, Dillon, and Ines were all furious with Celestine before she died, and as far as I can see, they were all in town that night. I think I'm already starting to see some motives forming... Jay was a scorned lover, Mason and Dillon had a falling out with Cel when MKML got their former parade route, Nonah was upset that Celestine gave away some sort of secret, Ines was salty about her documentary trailer screening, and Cyril called Cel a traitor right after his krewe was disbanded. Does that sound right to you?

Anyway, with all that bad juju directed right at her, no wonder Cel needed a "protector." Thankfully, her VuMail Drive led us straight to the conjure shop she visited that night. I told you I got in contact with Zee, but wow, I did not expect them to be so helpful! They gave me their notes as well as a card they tried to give to Celestine before she left.

Also, their client, the one that works at the coroner's office, got back to us about Celestine's case. The client couldn't steal the entire autopsy report, but he did manage to commit a (probably) minor crime by handing over a copy of the notes he took during the autopsy. It's hard to look at them, but I'm thankful they even exist. I promised him a free tattoo if he ever stops by the shop, but he was very sweet and told me not to worry about making it up to him since it was for Celestine.

I just can't believe we finally have some real documentation. It may not be official-official, but it's the closest we've ever gotten. Now we can actually start piecing together the events of that night and connecting them to what we already know. And I think the first thing is to figure out exactly when Celestine died.

Unfortunately, the client's notes don't include a time of death. He said they only cover the time during the autopsy before any calculations were made. So, I went ahead and gathered what I could to help. I found info on calculating time of death at the library, picked up a cemetery guide from one of those walking tours, and dug through my box of Carnival mementos for anything related to that night's events. From that, I'm sending a parade schedule and some old toys that were being thrown from the floats. Maybe they'll help you get a better sense of the city that night.

I also took a deep dive into all of the suspects' social media accounts to see what they were doing the week of the murder and uploaded the posts for you onto Michelle Gray's desktop at royalstreetcase.com. To be safe, I changed the password to ARMSTRONG.

We've got a lot of information, but like I said, I think we really need to know when Celestine died so that we can start ruling out our suspects. I'm not expecting you to find the exact second of when she took her last breath, but it needs to be a window of an hour or less to be worth our while. When you think you know, send me an email with the subject line TIMELINE and the full time window (HH:MM - HH:MM) in the body.

As soon as you can,

Sylvia Jones

Also uploaded screenshots of my texts with Ines from the other day that got me twisted. You'll see why...
